TEAMS AWAIT GONG FOR TITLE SERIES

Sox Fans Believe Cicotte, Benz and Russell Will Deliver the Goods.

Chicago. Oct. 4.—Hail, Hail, the gangs all here. With the arrival of the Giants this afternoon the stage is now set for the annual baseball classic—a series that promises to be the closest and most exciting since world championships have been fought out on the diamond. Even the most rabid White Sox rooter tonight is admitting it's no more than an even thing. The betting, even among the expert dopesters, reflects to an astoniahing degree the quality of the two teams.

astonishing degree the quality of the two teams.

The Sox firmly believe that pitching will decide the contests. McGraw on the train speeding West from Philadelphia this morning indicated the same belief. The Sox firmly believe that Clootte will deliver two and probably three games for them. They are not so sure of the rest of their first-string pitchers. They hope Bens and Russell will come through with wins. There is also a feeling among them that Faber will turn at least one successful trick. But they are frankly afraid that none of these three men. On the other hand the Giants feel certain that Schupp, Sallee and Perritt will deliver the bacon. All three men are reported tonight to be as near perfect form as careful nursing during the past few weeks can make them. Even if only two prove invincible—and the feeling in the ranks of the Giants is that Schupp and Salee are these two—they believe that they can win the necessary four victories.

But on both sides it is merely a feeling of belief and hope.

Each team frankly respects the heart of out-of-town stars was not entered, this year's fall folf tournament of two four-dented, they can ye fall of any of its predecessors, which is all that can be said in the way of tourn-ament play. Well over a 100 play-er teed off in the qualification round at eighteen holes yesterday.

contest is of as high and praiseworthy a type as was ever shown in any im-portant and bitterly fought college struggle. John J. McGraw with all his pugnacity and pittlessness for op-ponents, could not be more restrained and respectful of his coming opponents than if he were the coach of a school girl's baseball club. On neither side has there been a word of criticism, of disregard or of jocularity about the proficiency of the other team. Which is all a welcome departure from some of the bully-ragging and arrogant bon mots that have passed

But on both sides it is merely a feeling of belief and hope.
Each team frankly respects the playing powers of the other. Each team realizes that its opponent is strong in certain points of play where the other is weak. Both teams have a wholesome regard for the prowess of the opposing pitching.

Moreover, this brings to light another characteristic that has not always been present in world's series contests. There is not a single trace of bitterness or of unsportsmanlike expression towards the other. Professionalsm in baseball in this critical contest is of as high and praiseworthy a type as was ever shown in any important and hitterly fought college.

The pairings for match play this morning in the various sixteens, as well as the time of starting and the qualifying scores of yesterday, are as follows: FIRST SIXTEEN.

has there been a word of criticism, of disregard or of jocularity about the proficiency of the other team.

Which is all a welcome departure from some of the bully-ragging and arrogant bon mots that have passed between contestants in preceding world's series.

The teams on paper at least figure so closely that the bettors are chary. Not only is betting pracically at evens, but there is a remarkable dearth of it. It would be hard to find a good dollar wager in this whole town. Many hundreds are at stake, but even the most rabid White Sox fan is loath to offer more than even money. And of course, you can't expect the infrequent New Yorkers here to back his choice at any better figure in this way.

Many hundreds are at stake, but even the most rabid White Sox fan is loath to offer more than even money. And of course, you can't expect the infrequent New Yorkers here to back his choice at any better figure in this hot bed of Sox enthusiasm.

Of course there will not be room enough to accommodate the crowd that wants to see the games here—or haif he crowd. It is officially stated that while the Comiskey grounds will not take eare of more than 32,000 people there have been bona fide applications for five times that many seats. Requests by wire and mail for reservations have had to be returned by the hag full.

Hence the speculators are prospering. Prices have today mounted to almost prohibitive figures. Grand stand seats selling regularly at $5 have boosted to $15. Box seats for the series are up to $75. And what's more they are actually selling at these amazing prices.

Another mooted question was definitely settled today. here will be no objections to Eddie Cleotte's "shine" ball. Manager McGraw indicated this evening that he would make no protest to the much discussed delivery.

It has been generally agreed in a variety of quarters that the Giants and the White Sox are as closely matched as the Giants and the Red Sox of 1912-who needed eight games to decide supremacy. But Fate or Destiny may at any given moment upset the entire

The Giants and the Red Sox needed eight games. Yet in the closest series ever playd how many recall where one or two trifles might have overturned the whole arrangemnt?

In that 1912 series the Sox won the first game and tied the second. In the third contest Rube Marquard was facing Boston's hope. The score was 2—0 in the ninth, favoring the Giants, when Duffy Lewis singled and Gardner doubled, scoring Lewis. On Stahl's grounder Gardsingled and Gardner doubled, scoring Lewis. On Stahl's grounder Gardsingled at third, but Wagner was safe on an infield error. Then, singled and Gardner doubled, scoring Lewis. On Stahl's grounder Gardner was nipped at third, but Wagner was safe on an infield error. Then, with Stahl on third and Wagner on second and with two out, Cady cracked a line drive to right that looked as safe as a liberty bond. The odds were 10 to 1 that John Devore would never get within two strides of the ball.

But by one of those super-spectacular catches over his shoulder Josh achieved the almost-impossible, saving the game.

As Joe Wood and Hugh Bedient won the next two games handily, that lone catch of Devore's was all that prevented the Red Sox winning that lone catch of Devore's was all that prevented the Red Sox winning in (Rederis), $16.49, $1.70, second; Jean Josh Acklessing (Rederis), $1.70, second; Jean Josh Ackles

Josh achieved the almost-impossible, saving the game.

As Joe Wood and Hugh Bedient won the next two games handily, that lone catch of Devore's was all that prevented the Red Sox winning in five games with four victories and one draw.

Later on the two clubs proved to be evenly matched. But if that drive of Cady's had carried another six inches and Boston had won four games without a New York victory, the verdict would have been that New York was hopelessly outclassed.

In a short series one play may make a difference of two or three games. That brilliant catch of Devore's added three games to the 1912 series and nearly $200,000 to the total receipts.

games here today when his final effort resulted in a 5-to-4 win for the Washington team over the Red Sox. The game marked the close of the local American League season.

While there were periods in the game when it appeared as though the Red Sox players were not extending themselves for fear of spoiling Shaw's grand opening, Washington clearly outplayed the home team in all departments of the same. The game was a dull affair and was attended by less than 400 people.

Shaw's double in the second really settled the game, for he scored Shanks and Ainsmith with the clout. In the third, hits by Foster and Clyde Milan followed by Rice's double scored two runs. Rice scored liater on Janvrin's poor throw to the plate.

Ainsmith's bad peg to check a double steal allowed McNaily to score Boston's first run in the second. Hits by Janvrin and Gainer with a double by Walsh accounted for two more in the third. Walsh led the fifth with a safe single and taking second an infield out scored on McNaily's single.

Both teams scattered for their various homes tonight. A few of the Washington players will join the Red Sox party on a moose hunting trip through Northern Quebec. The score: Nationals.
